The Missionary Herald

VOLUME CXIV OCTOBER 1918 NUMBER 10

"DON'T waste"—sugar, flour, paper! We all understand as to the first two of these commodities that there is a shortage due to war conditions, and that we must be careful in our use of them. As to paper, the case is not so generally recognized; but the shortage is just as real. And the good officials who rule over us are putting on the screws as to the use of paper. They are even addressing so diminutive a user as the Missionary Herald. They ask that we use a little lighter weight of paper—that is, thinner sheets—so that we can get more pages from the same amount of stock; that we keep down the size of each issue to the minimum number of pages; and, most minute of all, that we allow the magazine to be folded once instead of being mailed flat, thus saving on the wrapping paper.

Conserving Paper

Each of these several requests proposes a small disadvantage to the magazine; taken together, they involve a loss to it. On the thinner page the illustrations or the text are likely to show through; the folding of the magazine will make a distorting crease through all the pictures that reach across the page; and there are reasons why it is desirable to have a larger magazine at some periods of the year than at others, as, for example, this month, when the "Donations" fill more than twenty pages.

We should like to disregard all these requests, but of course that cannot be done. We must cheerfully submit, glad to do what we can to help conserve all our goods that there may be more to spare for others who lack. We are sure that with this word of explanation our readers will accept the adjustment to another "war measure," and make allowance for whatever falling off there may have to be in the appearance of the Missionary Herald. We shall do our best to make it negligible.

OVERTURNINGS of the war have brought about many unexpected happenings. In the year 1900 one of the Board's new missionaries, Rev. Ernest C. Partridge, expressed his desire to be sent to Shansi province in China, where his sister had just lost her life as one of the martyrs in the Boxer outbreak. Circumstances, however, directed him to Turkey and to Sivas, where he had come to be in charge of the station. Forced out from there by the pinch of this war, Mr. Partridge went to the Caucasus for relief work. Driven from there, as related in his article in this number, and while waiting at Peking for instructions as to where to turn next, he took occasion to visit Shansi and to inspect the work in which, so long before, he had wished to share.

Armenia and Shansi

On this visit and while at Taiku, he was invited to address the church on a Sunday morning. His interpreter was Mr. K'ung, principal of the Oberlin-Shansi Memorial Academy, whom he first met, ten years before, at Oberlin, being introduced by a Sivas Armenian boy who was then a student with K'ung at Oberlin. The Armenian lad returned to Sivas, became a teacher in the college of which Mr. Partridge was the principal, and labored hard and usefully till the reign of terror of 1915. Then, after long weeks of imprisonment, with pressure and appeal from the most prominent Turks to recant, he finally was led out to be murdered, giving his life as one of the numberless Christian martyrs of the Armenian race. Meanwhile his college mate, who had escaped the Boxer fury, had returned to China, and was pursuing his course of service and devotion for his people.

As a result of Mr. Partridge's address to that Shansi China church, in which he told of their fellow-Christians' witness unto death in Turkey, and after an impassioned appeal from Mr. K'ung, an offering for Armenian relief was made, amounting to $30, afterwards raised to $50 by gifts from the boys of the academy. One incident shows the spirit and affords some measure of the giving. A gatekeeper on a salary of $4 (Mexican) a month, who had received a gift of $5 for a visit to his home that he had not seen for twenty-eight years, brought it to be added to the relief fund, saying that he preferred to give it and postpone his vacation trip.

The war is in many ways bringing the peoples of the world together; the sense of Christian comradeship is a mighty cement to hold them together.

Expanding Relief Work

THE AMERICAN COMMITTEE for Armenian and Syrian Relief, which has received and appropriated within the past three years over $12,000,000, is the only organized agency that is caring for the stricken non-Moslems in Turkey and the Transcaucasus and for the starving millions in Persia. It is coöperating with the Red Cross in relief work in Palestine and Egypt. While the amount already raised seems in the aggregate large, yet when one realizes that the people in dire need number some three million souls, the inadequacy of this sum becomes manifest.

The committee is planning a special effort in November to raise $30,000,000, and a large list of annual subscribers who will continue to support these refugees until they can be repatriated and reëstablished upon a self-supporting basis.

Sec. James L. Barton, of the American Board, as chairman of the committee, and Mr. Charles V. Vickery, its executive secretary, completed, the middle of August, a month's trip in the interest of this larger plan. They met the local state committees in Cleveland, Chicago, St. Louis, Kansas City, Omaha, Denver, Salt Lake City, Los Angeles, San Francisco, Portland, Seattle, and Minneapolis, and were gratified and encouraged to find how widespread is the general interest in this work of mercy. They traveled by night when possible, meeting their committees upon successive days. In most places they were given lunches by Chambers of Commerce, Boards of Trade, and other civic organizations, where they made addresses. They found all classes of people among the promoting forces—Jews, Roman Catholics, Mormons, and Protestants of every shade, but all united in the one resolve to defeat, if possible, the concerted endeavor to destroy the non-Moslem populations of Turkey. The fact that the people, which the committee through its missionary distributors is sustaining, represent the only anti-German and pro-Ally elements in Turkey, the Transcaucasus, and Persia has much weight with those who believe that under present circumstances supreme emphasis must be placed upon winning the war.

As Others See Us

IT is always gratifying to come unexpectedly upon a word of approval for the work of the American Board. We are indebted to Prof. George H. Blakeslee, of Clark University, for calling attention to such a remark in a book entitled, "Volkerdammerung im Stillem Ozean." Its author, Dr. Irmer, was for a time governor of the Marshall Islands, and so was brought in contact with the members of our Micronesia Mission. Speaking of them in his book (page 19), he says: "It is especially due to their sacrificing energy that in the island territories the wild cannibals and bloodthirsty reef pirates have been made peaceful men. The Americans did not limit themselves to prayers, singing, and tea-drinking. In the Marshall Islands in my time there were no longer any young people who had not learned to read and write in the American mission school on Kusaie." This testimony is doubly welcome, as it comes from the chief exponent (in his time) of German rule among the little islands of the Pacific.

An Industrial Survey in Africa

MR. ATKINS'S appreciative words concerning one piece of work being done at Amanzimtoti, to be found in the Foreign Department, both gain emphasis from and add emphasis to a paper entitled, "Does It Pay to Educate the Native?" read by Mr. A. E. LeRoy, principal of Amanzimtoti Institute, before a meeting of the Natal Native Affairs Committee, held in Durban last April. Mr. LeRoy had made careful investigation of the careers of the 353 students who left the institute during the four years, 1912–1916. He had followed this inquiry with personal visits to the employers of these former students in Durban, Maritzburg, Johannesburg, Pretoria, and other centers, to get their opinions of the boys. He put to these men five specific questions, their answers to which he was able to tabulate or classify so as to secure definite data upon which to form an impartial judgment.

The paper, which was reported at length in the Natal Advertiser, proved a most interesting and valuable contribution to its subject. It noted the change that had come in twenty years, from the time when the white man thought little about the native to the present universal concern regarding his status. There are four and a half million blacks to one and a quarter million whites in the South Africa Union; the blacks live on a very small percentage of the land, much of it unfertile, and are increasingly flocking to the cities and to closer contact with the Europeans. The question of race adjustment has become paramount.

Mr. LeRoy noted also the change of attitude that had come toward educating the black laborer. A decade ago it was common to talk of spoiling the native; now there is as widespread recognition of the value of educational missions. In his recent interviews with employers he had been uniformly met with courtesy; a chair and even a cigarette had been offered as a token of friendly appreciation.

To the question whether it pays to educate the native, Mr. LeRoy presents his tables of figures, showing that of the 353 students, 10 were in France and 103 were working for Europeans in South Africa; 37 per cent were so employed; the great majority of the rest were teaching or working for the uplift of their race. As to character and standing, not one of these men has been imprisoned for any cause whatever; and 83 per cent of the boys leaving the school the past year have never drunk beer or other intoxicants. It appears further that instead of being restless and unreliable, these school-trained lads, according to an inquiry made of 131 cases, had averaged four years and nine months of service under one employer. To the direct question, What the European employer thinks of the educated native, the specific answers of those questioned in 185 cases showed that none were regarded as worthless, 7 as poor, 14 as fair, 80 as good, 55 as very good, and 28 as excellent.

Mr. LeRoy sums up his inquiry as follows: "We may say that if education induces the best of the native people to go back and work for the uplift of their kith and kin; if the educated native is more temperate, works longer and more steadily than the raw native; if the average educated native is ranked by his employer as varying from good to very good, and from his wages is evidently worth from two to four times as much as the uneducated man, then it seems to us that, to use parliamentary language, 'the answer to the question is in the affirmative.' "

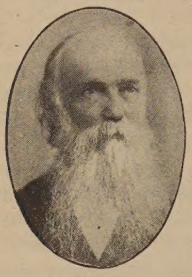
The Passing of a Pioneer

THE death of Rev. Orson P. Allen, reported as having occurred at Constantinople, June 21, removes the last of that group of pioneers whose names are indelibly associated with the Harpoot station of the Eastern Turkey Mission. "Father Allen," as he was affectionately called by all in the Harpoot circle, was born in Smyrna, N. Y., November 6, 1827, so that he lived to the ripe age of ninety-one. After graduation from Amherst College and Andover Seminary, he sailed from Boston in 1853 with his wife, Caroline R. Wheeler, and arrived in Smyrna in December of that year. Stationed for a twelvemonth at Trebizond, they then removed to Harpoot, preceding by a few years Rev. Crosby H. Wheeler, brother of Mrs. Allen, and Rev. Herman N. Barnum, his close associates through the long period of service at Harpoot. Mrs. Allen's failing health compelled their return to the United States in 1896. After her death, and following a considerable sojourn in this country, Mr. Allen returned to Turkey with his daughter, Miss Annie T. Allen, a Woman's Board of Missions for the Pacific missionary, and made his home with her at the station of Brousa till the pressure of the war compelled them to withdraw to Constantinople. Of Mr. Allen's two sons, Rev. Edward P. and Rev. Herbert M., the latter was also a missionary of the American Board in Turkey till his death at Constantinople in 1911.



REV. O. P. ALLEN

"Father Allen" was a gentle, lovable man, who went quietly about his work and impressed his Christian spirit on all who came within his reach. In addition to the manifold labors of a general missionary, he was for long years the treasurer of the Harpoot station. In reporting Mr. Allen's passing, Rev. W. Nesbitt Chambers, who is representing the Board at Geneva, that neutral center of communication, makes this appropriate comment:—

"One can imagine those three men, Wheeler, Barnum, and Allen, getting together in Paradise and comparing notes as to the state of the work to which they had given their hearts and lives, and for the progress of which they formed a trio of unusual power. When we call to mind their great success, and compare it with the present situation, one is tempted to ask the question as to whether the present catastrophe can be made to serve the advance of the Kingdom of God. The answer may be made that if the spirit of devotion that characterized the lives of those three men should dwell in the hearts of those who succeed them in the work of reconstruction, the advance of the Kingdom will be assured, and it will rise from its trial purified as by fire."

Of these pioneer missionaries, less than two years ago Mrs. Barnum's body was laid to rest beside that of her husband in the mission cemetery at Harpoot; within the year past Mrs. Wheeler died in this country; now Mr. Allen joins the reunited circle; three of the six were buried in the soil of the land for whose redemption they gave their all.

A Hospital Unit

A HOSPITAL as we know it means a staff of doctors, another of nurses, and so on. It ought not to mean less anywhere. The China Medical Board has committed itself to the view that no missionary hospital should have less than two doctors in attendance. The American Board approves that view and sets it as a goal. But the exigencies of the situation, the lack of both men and money, have compelled the tolerance of many "one-man hospitals." And it is amazing how much one man can do with even a very modest equipment. The story of one such hospital, that at Tunghsien, a suburb of Peking, of which Dr. O. Houghton Love is in charge, constitutes the October issue of the Envelope Series, just out. Added interest will be taken in the account, since Dr. Love is now on furlough in this country, and will be seen and heard (as at the Annual Meeting in Hartford) by many of the Board's constituency. Incidentally it is said that Mr. Roger Greene, representative of the China Medical Board at Peking, has expressed his high appreciation of what has been accomplished in the administering of this "one-man hospital."

Good Hunting for Snap Shots

AMATEUR photography has nowhere proved of more value than on the foreign mission field. How much it has contributed to bringing near and making real the strange scenes and conditions in the midst of which our missionaries work! The Missionary Herald is constantly indebted to the skill of some one who has picked up photography as a side issue, and who has put it to use where there is no professional photographer at hand. Our readers are thus able to see the event which the accompanying text describes.

One of these missionary photographers at an interior station has become so expert that all her associates depend upon her films for their pictures. She has a fairly good camera for ordinary work, but greatly desires one with quicker and sharper lens, that will enable her to take objects in motion, under difficult conditions, or at disadvantageous times. Such a camera would cost, with discount, about fifty dollars. It may be that one of our readers has such a camera, now for some reason in disuse; the gift of it would be a real help to the missionary cause, and a happy recognition of the work already done by this one photographer.

And while on the subject, we may add that a good camera is ever welcome at these Rooms; we always know of missions or stations where it would meet a need. It would be a pity if one should be left idle and laid away, when it might be portraying living situations in the mission field.

A New Missionary Mine

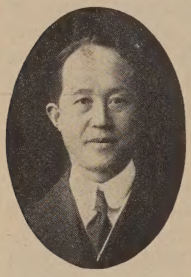
IT is reported that a foreign missionary board is definitely planning to seek for new missionaries after the war from the ranks of army chaplains. A host of ministers all over the country have offered themselves, under the challenge of these war times, for service with the troops, and have secured chaplaincies. They are among the finest and most aspiring of the younger ministers of the country. Many of them have resigned their pastorates, or at least loosened the ties which bound them to church and place. They will have experience of work in foreign surroundings and with masses of men; the world will be at once a bigger and a more commanding field for their powers. The idea of saving the world will gain in reality and definiteness, and in appeal to their hearts. It is altogether likely that some of them, many of them, will be more responsive to the foreign missionary call than ever before.

The idea is reasonable and promising. It is in line with the expectations of many that because of the devotion of life which the war has evoked, and from the multitudes of our finest youth who are now enrolled as soldiers or sailors, there will come when the war is over a host of recruits for the missionary army. The American Board is looking with eager eyes for such a reënforcement of its ranks.

AWAKENING BUDDHISM IN JAPAN

By Rev. TORAJI MAKINO, of Kyoto

DURING an evangelistic tour along the Inland Sea of Japan a few years ago, I came across many Buddhist temples, each with a nice looking post, "Juniors' Church," which will at once suggest a Christian institution. I was further informed that the priests cunningly devised a scheme on account of the fact that the school children do not like to attend the Sunday school in a temple and listen to a priest, because they always associate a Sunday school with a church and a teacher. The priests sought to camouflage the temple with a post signifying a church, and they are inviting a school teacher to tell some interesting stories to them instead of attempting themselves to talk about Buddhism. They even induce the children with some kind of cards, copied almost literally after Christian Sunday school cards; and quite often they please the children with some eatables, too. It was a little after the imperial coronation, and the big Hongwan-ji, the center of the Shin sect, ordered her subordinate temples throughout the country to inaugurate the occasion by having a Sunday school in every temple in her sect. So the poor priest had to rely upon any means for keeping up his prestige, by having a Sunday school in his temple.



REV. TORAJI MAKINO

It is quite common in a temple belonging to this sect to have the children's class on every Sunday with organ music, sometimes with the very same Christian tunes, with a slight modification of words, and also with a card or tract, another imitation of a Christian usage. They began to celebrate the marriage ceremony in the temple before a Buddha, to whom all of their forefathers looked up as a sign of celibacy. Funeral services were of course often held in the temple, but to have a matrimonial celebration in it was before quite an unknown thing. The imitation is not limited there, but goes on in several lines. Thus we find Young Men's Buddhist Associations; Women's Buddhist Societies; and many philanthropic organizations are patterned after Christian models. Even an institutional temple may be found with a sort of asylum, orphanage, or exprisoners' home in it. Of course, during the past history of Japan some Buddhist temples were in similar service in one way or another, but they had different motives and manners.

Street preachings, tent evangelistic campaigns, summer schools, and every kind of propaganda are adopted. Regular preaching services are held in many temples several times a month, and the priests are really trying to instruct the people. This revival is strongest among the Shin sect, most modernized sect of all, though the Nichiren, Jodo, and Zen are also being affected. These four sects were the Japanese products during the religious awakening of the latter part of the twelfth century to the middle part of the thirteenth century; the four great sects of the Kamakura period, with which Buddhism may be said to have been thoroughly planted in the life of the Japanese at large. Out of a total of 72,191 Buddhist temples in existence today, 53,245 belong to them, and they represent the dominant forces of Japanese Buddhism today. But these activities are also not lacking in the Shingon and Tendai, the two large sects which represent the old Buddhism of the Kyoto dynasty of the ninth century. Above all, however, the Shin sect is most enterprising, so that it sends missionaries not only to China, but also to Japanese settlers in Western lands.

The training of the young priests in the new education and the reorganization of their temple system after the modern fashion are the two great factors which are affecting Japanese Buddhism to the very foundations of its existence. Certainly these two factors are indispensable for its equipments as a modern religion, and it cannot expect to compete with others without them. But alas, it is killing itself with its own weapons.

The writer remembers the time when the priests were attacking the Christian Bible with a higher criticism borrowed from a German school. But what will be said of their sacred canon, containing no less than 6,771 books, after applying the method of historical investigation to their own scriptures? Darwinian evolution, Spencerian agnosticism, and some other Western scientific weapons have been used by these scholastic priests against Christianity, sometimes in a most cunning way, but one cannot help but smile to see that the time is coming when these scientific teachings will turn their malicious weapons upon their own master, and there will be hardly anything left of what is essential in their teachings.

There is much talking about the so-called Neo-Buddhism to recast the old Buddhistic teachings into one new teaching, and thus to accomplish the union of all the sects; a union which, if it stops short of actual organic oneness, should at least result in one great coöperative enterprise, which it is hoped by its promoters will make the religion of the Buddha once more a living force in the life of Japan. This is also another example of their activities, inspired by the union movements in Christian circles. A beautiful white brick building in the grounds of the famous Asakusa temple in Tokyo is a monument to these would-be reformers, but any one visiting these grounds will usually find the doors of this building closed, while the filthy old Kwannon temple close by, with its well-worn idols and fortune telling priests, seems as popular as ever. If it has lost hold on the hearts of the people at all, it is because adjacent to the temple grounds is Tokyo's center for the "Movies," which offer to modern Japan far greater attraction than the old Buddhist cults.

Dr. T. Inouye, of the Tokyo Imperial University, writing on the need of reform in Buddhism, pointed out what he considers the great defects in the religion, and the writer wishes to borrow this opinion in regard to Japanese Buddhism.

TWELVE-STORY TOWER IN GROUNDS OF ASAKUSA TEMPLE

The first defect is the character of the priests. "Buddhist priests, with a few exceptions, are behind the rest of the world in education, character, morals, and influence; and though Christianity's rivalry has stirred some of them to emulation in education and charitable enterprises of recent years, these works of charity have been far from vigorous."

The second defect is the idol worship and the practice of reading and chanting the Sutras in a language which, practically, neither the priest nor the congregation understands.

The third defect is the pessimism of India, which is of the essence of Japanese Buddhism. "Pessimism is the creed of a decaying nationality in the hour of adversity," according to Dr. Inouye, "when this world looks dark and life has no hope to offer us. Then in despair we turn from this miserable world and seek comfort in the hope of something better after death. In ancient India pessimism was perhaps natural, but pessimism can never raise a nation to a higher life, and what Japan, with its new hopes and aspirations, requires is a religion of hope, full of noble ideals and aspirations. Buddhism must shed its pessimism or lose its hold on the people." But how can the teaching of a religion which has no positive idea of the personal God, the Heavenly Father, be a religion of hope, full of noble ideals and aspirations?

The fourth defect is the prevailing superstitions, according to the same scholar. To give his own words: "There are countless superstitions in Buddhism, practices and doctrines which the ignorant accept blindly and the educated laugh at. We will take but one instance, that of Sumisen, the fabled mountain, which Buddhist cosmology places at the center of the world. We might mention others—transmigration, the six spheres of sentient existence, Paradise, Hades, the innumerable Buddhas and Bodhisattvas.

The world has progressed since the days of S'Akyamuni; still more so perhaps since the days when the Mahayana Sutras were written. Can we of the Meiji period, with our modern education in the principles of science, be expected to accept these antiquated superstitions?"

The fifth and last defect pointed out by the same critic is its ethics. He said that the ethical ideals of Buddhism are those held in India over two thousand years ago, "and the men who live by them unfit themselves to become the ethical teachers of a modern commercial and industrial generation of men. Japan wants a system of religious morals, but it must be one suited to her present needs. Buddhists may yet be the moral teachers of this nation, if they will bring their ethical system into harmony with the present-day needs." But how can one raise a fig out of a bramble? For the Buddhistic psychology has never asserted that the self or ego has real existence and contented itself with a "provisional self." In order to bring their ethical system, therefore, into harmony with the present-day needs, they have to change the very basis of their ethical system.

These are the attacks of an enlightened thinker, who considers himself a friend, upon Japanese Buddhism; but unfortunately the critic does not go to the real bottom of the question. For Buddhism lacks an adequate conception of the divine, and consequently there is no conviction of personality. Where there is no personality, no responsibility comes.

The writer cannot end the article without mentioning one beautiful instance of what awakening Buddhism in Japan has produced. When Mr. C. Tateishi, of Tsuyama, a respectable gentleman whose ancestry leads back without break to the well-known Buddhist reformer, Honen Shonin, a founder of the Jodo sect, was asked why he dared to become a convert to a new religion and to bring the shame to the family so honored with such distinguished Buddhist ancestors, he answered with emphatic tones, saying, "Let me ask you why our Honen seven centuries ago dared to found a new sect of Buddhism in spite of many hardships and intolerable sufferings? Just think what he would do in this generation of today. I am fulfilling his sincere desires in becoming a Christian." It was some thirty years ago that he was baptized. Now he is over seventy years of age, but he is the most active layman preacher in the whole Chugoku district, and is accomplishing what is worthy of his distinguished ancestors, only in better and superior ways. Jesus said, "I am not come to destroy, but to fulfill." No doubt Christianity at present is fulfilling what Buddhism has not succeeded in accomplishing in the past.

MR. TATEISHI

NOTE.— Readers are recommended for further study on the subject to the able work of Dr. A. K. Reischauer— "Studies in Japanese Buddhism"—to which the above article is indebted.

A "COUNTY FAIR" IN AN INDIAN DISTRICT

WE are indebted to Mr. Sam Higginbottom, superintendent of the Department of Agriculture in Ewing Christian College, at Allahabad, India, for this description of an agricultural exhibition which occurred at Gwalior, the largest city in a district by the same name in India.

Mr. Higginbottom is enthusiastic over the progress made in teaching better agricultural methods among the Indian farmers, and speaks of the appointment of a Committee on Agriculture and Industry by the National Missionary Council and of attending a meeting, in Poona, of the Government's Board of Agriculture. His story of the Gwalior "Fair" follows:—

"The Gwalior exhibition has just closed, and after it is all over it is said to have been the largest and most interesting on record in Central India. The North India Mission entered on a new era in mission work, for all the agricultural arrangements for the exhibition were in its hands. Mr. Griffin, with his tractors actually plowing, his harrows harrowing, his pumps pumping, his fine crops of pedigreed wheat and grain, proved an attraction superior to the wrestling arena. Dr. Kenoyer, in his beautiful research laboratory, with experiments of all kinds under way so that the Indian farmers could see and understand; his charts, microscopes, and seed testing, proved to be far more popular than the Indian juggler who makes the mango tree grow and bear fruit under a gunny bag.

"Mrs. Wiser, with her demonstrations of fruit canning and vegetable preservation, showing the people of India a cheap, sanitary, and easy way of saving food, was much more popular than the nautch girl. The Maharajah brought down the ladies of the palace to see and to learn her methods. As he was a mere man, he could not go in under the canopy, which was kept strictly purdah. The fruit and vegetables were grown in the palace gardens, the jars were made in the state pottery, common Indian cooking vessels were used, and the little, common, Indian portable stoves gave the fire for cooking and sterilization. Thus attention was drawn to the fact that India could do these things for herself just as well as to depend upon Europe and America for preserved fruits and vegetables.

"A few days after Mrs. Wiser had shown the ranis and the princesses how to can and put up food, the Maharajah sent them back to demonstrate to Mrs. Wiser how well they had learned their lessons. He wanted to be sure they got it right, for the very good reason that he will have to eat the things they put up.

"Mr. Slater came over with a lot of his chickens from Etah to manage the poultry part of the exhibition. It was the best poultry show I have ever seen in India. The judging was done by Sir Edwin John, of Agra, who knows his job, and the interesting fact emerged that all the first prizes and grand championships were won, not by imported birds, but by birds that had been bred in the country from imported stock.

"From now on India will be less dependent upon importations, but can develop types suited to her own needs. This is of the greatest importance to the poultry interests of India, and Mr. Slater has good reason to be happy over the outcome of his years of labor to introduce better poultry among the low caste converts as a way to improving their economic condition, and fitting them to pay the salaries of their own preachers and teachers."

EIGHT THOUSAND MILES ACROSS ASIA

By Rev. ERNEST C. PARTRIDGE, of Sivas, Turkey

Adapted from an Illustrated Diary-Letter Mailed from China

ON the morning of March 19 we Americans left Erivan in response to the summons sent us by Consul Smith, by the hand of Mr. Craig, the Young Men's Christian

ANCIENT TATAR TOWERS IN BAKU
Note holes on sides

Association secretary in charge of the Caucasus front. This call, we learned in Tiflis, was in view of the imminent danger of the fall of Kars and Batoum to the Turks, and the pressing down towards Tiflis of the Germans and the consequent activity of the Tatars in our section. A determining factor in our decision to accept the consul's advice and leave the country at once was the certainty that we would within a few days be interned and not allowed to continue our work.

TIFLIS TO BAKU

After a couple of days or so in Tiflis, we left for Baku in two second-class cars, secured for us by Consul Smith, the party consisting of thirty-two relief and Young Men's Christian Association people, and representing, with its servants and accessories, eight nationalities. We were not troubled. You can travel anywhere in Russian territory where I have been if you say you are an American missionary.

FIGHTING IN BAKU

We found that Consul Smith's haste in getting us out was wise, for within three or four days travel over the road was completely disrupted. We arranged, after some delay, to charter a small freight steamer to take our party to Astrakhan, but until word came that the Volga was open for traffic no steamer could start. Then, when we began to see hope of moving, the conflict began in Baku between the Bolsheviks and Tatars.

The Tatars made an effort to take the control of the city away from the Bolsheviks. Fighting continued without intermission for three days and nights. From the English Club, on a hillside overlooking the harbor, we could see the Bolsheviks, and Armenians who were with them, go up over the hill and into the Tatar quarter, and could judge as to the progress of the fight from the sound of firing and the fires in the Tatar quarter. We could see them bring the bodies of the dead and wounded down the hill to the ambulances, which ran in front of our quarters to the hospitals farther out in the suburbs. Frequently the three gunboats and several other ships, on which guns had been mounted, would join in and bombard the Tatar quarter. We could see the flash of the guns, the dust and falling walls where the shell struck, and then could hear the sound of the explosion and of the crash when the building was hit. A good many fires were also started, and every night these lighted up the sky. Tatars outside the city set fire to oil wells, whose burning added to the general effect. A bad fire on the docks burned all one night.

In the effort to get a ship and get away from Baku, several elements conspired against us. The Volga was not clear of ice for travel; the company was unwilling to send out the first boat for plutocrats like us, as it would involve it in endless rows with soldiers who wanted to go. All the ships were occupied by refugees, etc. The current so-called government sided with labor, and every sailor on the boat had to be appeased before he would turn a hand. It was very difficult to find bread, and without that the crew would not go.

After much managing we got away on April 9, and had a satisfactory journey of three days to Astrakhan. Here we hired accommodations on a steamer for the larger number of our party, with permission to live on board till the Volga was sufficiently free of ice for the steamer to proceed.

FROM ASTRAKHAN TO SAMARA

Four of us, Messrs. Craig, Wells, James, and I, started from Astrakhan by train for Saratof, which we reached after ferrying across the Volga. We could not secure sleeper tickets, but the Commissioner of Police at the Saratof station put us into a special car reserved for some delegates going to Moscow. We were fairly comfortable to a junction, where we had to change and where we missed our connection, and slept again on our baggage. There were thousands of Czecho-Slav soldiers there. Here we were put into a box car, a small box car, twenty-two feet by ten, in which sixty passengers of us traveled for twenty-six hours, covering ninety-eight miles!

After various adventures at Penza, the junction which we had reached, we boarded another box car train for Samara, and there met an American consul and a dozen Young Men's Christian Association men, some of them acquaintances from Vladivostok and Moscow. Messrs. Craig and Wells left us there for a time, and Mr. James (of the American Board's relief party) and I were left to go on alone.

WITH CZECHO–SLOVAK SOLDIERS

In Samara we found an interesting problem. In this section were about 50,000 Czecho-Slovak soldiers (Bohemians), most of them at the beginning of the war in the Austrian army, later captured and prisoners in Siberia. With the overturn in government they were released and put into the Russian army in Ukrainia, where they fought until the Russian army blew up and went out of business. Then they offered themselves to the Allies, and were moving towards Vladivostok to fight on the Western front. The Young Men's Christian Association was trying to send secretaries with them, and asked James and me to take a train through. We left Samara on the 23d of April. Our train consisted of fifty box cars and two second-class passenger coaches, carrying about 700 men. We had a refrigerator car and two or three cars of supplies, a wagon and pair of horses for dray work, and carried one carload of oxen for meat supply. The men were armed and we had, in addition, machine guns, a field piece, camp kitchens, etc. One of the coaches was a hospital outfit, the other for the officers, a dozen in number, with whom we were.

The two men whose compartment we shared were fine fellows. Both were of the machine gun corps. Lieutenant P. was the son of a Moravian Protestant pastor, a judge in time of peace. Lieutenant K. was a banker; was in the Austrian army, a prisoner at Tashkent in Turkestan for a year, then an officer in the Serbian army; wounded, driven out of Roumania by the Germans, then wore a Russian uniform as a Czecho-Slav officer, and expected to don a French uniform. Both of these men had learned Russian well in the prison camp, and they had also learned considerable English. Under our help they made rapid progress in speaking.

We jogged slowly along to Cheliabinsk, in the Ural Mountains, where we went on a side switch and waited for the track ahead to be cleared up. There were some eighty of these Czecho-Slav trains, and they made a rather heavy burden on the rolling stock of the railroads. It was all the time suspected also that the Germans were interfering with our progress and trying to compel us to go via Archangel. May 2, our relief party passed us in two special cars, but we stuck to the troop train for a little longer. When, however, we found it might be delayed for some weeks, we decided to get out of Siberia as soon as we could.

URALS TO VLADIVOSTOK

We got on a heavily crowded train bound for Urkutsk on May 7. James and I slept and ate together on an upper berth for five days and six nights, to Urkutsk, 2,021 miles. The ventilation was vile, but we stood on the platform part of the daytimes. We were both about sick when we got off that train. Most of the way across Siberia we could buy at the stations eggs, butter, cheese, bread, milk, and sometimes cooked meat. We could always get hot water for tea at the stations.

At Urkutsk, to which place the Manchurian passport office had been removed, we were very fortunate. The officials fixed us up so that we could rush out and take a through train which was just starting. A red consular seal or the words, "American mission," open doors and secure courtesy in Russia; even a birth certificate—in English—sometimes works wonders.

We presently branched off the Manchuria line toward Habarovsk, which we reached after three days, at about ten in the evening. We could get no sleeping accommodations, so we ordered tea in the station dining room, and slept all night at our table. Here we at last got a sleeper, and in two days more were at Vladivostok.

WALTER JAMES

IN VLADIVOSTOK

Of the Czecho-Slav soldiers, about 15,000 are in Vladivostok, probably 10,000 more this side of Omsk, and the rest along the road back to and beyond Samara. They are a fine lot of men and will make a great addition to the Allied forces if they get there, which I somewhat doubt. Since we passed over the route, there are reports of fighting between them and the Bolsheviks, as we were told there would be if they tried to disarm them.

The Young Men's Christian Association in Vladivostok is doing a fine piece of work with a splendid staff of men. Story, the secretary for Siberia, is a professor of economics in Northwestern University, I think. Heald, one of the strong men, is in charge of the work among the soldiers. He has a bunch of half a dozen live wires, who are working hard among these men, especially the Czecho-Slavs. Goodsell (of the Board's staff in Turkey) is city secretary, and has with him Long, a physical director of experience; a boys' work specialist, Summerville; Simmons as religious work secretary; and Martin as educational secretary. James is working with Story on the general Siberian work.

Found our party all here. They got in only thirty-six hours ahead of us. A United States cruiser looked fine in the harbor, as did also the British craft. There were two Japanese boats and one small Chinese gunboat in the harbor.

A FINAL NOTE FROM PEKING

Summing up the journey from Peking, where I slept on a regular bed, with sheets, pillowcase, hair mattress, and springs, I find that we were on the road from Erivan to Peking seventy-five days, also seventy-five nights. Only one night in all that time did I enjoy a complete outfit of bedding, and that was on the American sleeper. On two nights men, whose guest I was, divided, so I drew a sheet. I had, from Alexandropol to Habarovsk, a blanket and quilt. A few nights I had the use of a traveling bedstead; most of the time I slept on floors, tables, or the deck of a vessel. From Erivan to Vladivostok is 7,176 miles; thence to Peking, 944 miles more. We stopped three days in Tiflis; two weeks in Baku; two days in Samara; ten days in Cheliabinsk in a Czecho-Slav train, and nine days in Vladivostok.

Hartford Welcomes American Board

BY
Truman J. Spencer
Chairman Publicity Committee

The State Capitol

THE American Board was organized in Farmington, a suburb of Hartford, in 1810, and eight times Hartford has entertained the Board, the last time in 1901. Again it offers its heartiest greetings to this great missionary body and all its friends, and bids them a cordial welcome.

The sessions will be held in the First, popularly known as the Center Church, whose pastor, Rev. Rockwell Harmon Potter, D.D., is also chairman of the local Executive Committee. First Church was organized in 1632, the famous Thomas Hooker being its first pastor. Its present building, erected in 1807, was recently refurnished and decorated. It is, both outside and within, one of the finest specimens of Colonial church architecture extant. Its beautiful modern parish house, spendidly equipped, will be used for the Board's exhibits, for reception and rest rooms, for writing rooms; and it offers a spacious and comfortable auditorium for stereopticon lectures. Mr. Leverett Belknap is chairman of the Hospitality Committee; and Mr. Truman J. Spencer is secretary of the local Executive Committee.

Hartford was settled in 1636 and three years later adopted "the first written constitution in the history of nations," which was based upon the principle of the right of the people to choose their officers and to have a voice in making the laws; and to define and limit the powers of their rulers. Today the great powers of the earth are battling to make this principle supreme. American democracy traces its origin to Hartford.

Hartford has from the beginning been a natural stronghold of Congregationalism, both through its churches and its leaders. Today its Congregational churches number eleven, several of them having recently united. There are the First; the Second, of which Rev. Edwin Pond Parker, D.D., is pastor emeritus; the Asylum Hill, with Dr. Joseph H. Twichell as emeritus; Immanuel, Fourth, Windsor Avenue, Talcott Street, Zion, Plymouth, Danish and Italian organizations. Though outside the city limits, the churches at Wethersfield and at East and West Hartford are part of the religious life of the city; while to the north is the Windsor Church, organized in 1630, the oldest Congregational church in America.

The Hartford Seminary, with its allied School of Religious Pedagogy and School of Missions, is one of the leading religious educational institutions of the country, President William Douglas Mackenzie being at the head. Here is housed the valuable and intensely interesting Missionary Museum of the American Board. The Congregational House is at 39 Garden Street, where Rev. Sherrod Soule, superintendent of the Connecticut Home Missionary Society, has his headquarters.

Hartford is the insurance center of the United States. Its twenty-two companies have assets of over five millions. Its manufactures are products of the highest type of mechanical and inventive genius. Here are made the famous Colt revolver and the Browning machine gun; the Underwood and Royal typewriters; and many other machines and articles of world-wide reputation. Among its principal structures are the Travelers Insurance Building, 790 feet high, one of the six tallest buildings in the world; the J. P. Morgan Memorial and Art Gallery; the State Capitol; the Old State House; Trinity College; the Connecticut Historical Society Rooms; and the Young Men's Christian Association and Young Women's Christian Association buildings, the latter just being completed.

Hartford is famous for its park system, which contains over 1,300 acres. The eye of the visitor is greeted upon alighting at the Union Station by the beautiful Bushnell Park, the oldest public park in America, originated by and named after the great Congregational divine, Dr. Horace Bushnell. Here are the Soldiers and Sailors Memorial Arch and the Corning Memorial Fountain, both unique and striking works of art. Almost surrounding the city are Elizabeth Park, with its famous rose gardens; Pope, Colt, and Riverside Parks and Keney Park, each having its distinctive features of beauty and usefulness.

In this year of world-wide change and struggle for the triumph of righteousness, in which the influences of the American Board are so largely felt, Hartford expects great things of the coming meeting.

The house in which was held the first Annual Meeting in Hartford of the American Board, September 16 and 17, 1812. When this picture was taken, the house was No. 13 Prospect Street, directly opposite what was Thomas Hooker's lot in the original apportionment of land to the settlers of Hartford, and on which Pastor Hooker's house stood.

"Our new arrangement of having native leaders in charge of certain districts is working well. The natives like it and the leaders are assuming a responsibility which is giving fresh incentive to the work and at the same time relieving the missionaries somewhat. It is a move in the direction of a solution of one of our problems."—Rev. Henry S. Hollenbeck, M.D., Kamundongo, West Africa.

AN UNWELCOME DEFICIT

THE books have just been closed, showing a total deficit of $26,824. This announcement brings deep disappointment to all the friends of the Board. Unusual difficulties were before the Treasury Department in estimating this year's expenditures. Mails from our distant mission fields take twice as long as formerly. The last letters from India have been three months and five days on the way, consequently the financial reports from half our missions are not in hand, and it has entailed an endless task in studying past reports from every field in order to establish the figure of probable expenditure in each mission.

A close study of these receipts reveals two facts—first, that the income of the American Board itself, without counting upon the receipts from the Woman's Boards, has not reached the figures of last year. The receipts for the month of August show a falling off of over $13,000, and for the entire year a decrease of nearly $20,000.

The actual decrease in receipts from churches for August is $5,422. The greatest losses of the year are in the matured Conditional Gifts. This was so substantial an amount that it overbalanced the good gain in gifts from individuals of $6,800. It is clear that a substantial deficit is before us. The increased expenditures of the Board could only be met by a big income during August, and we face an actual decrease in that column.

Every friend of missions will rejoice in the total of gifts from the Woman's Boards. In one year they have leaped forward $106,900. That makes it a Jubilee year indeed.

A GREAT EFFORT

It was an instance of team-work on the part of over two thousand widely scattered individuals. No one organized them; they organized themselves. At various times and seasons, known only to God, these people enrolled themselves in a band to help the American Board in this time of war and of great financial stress.

We learned of the formation of this band of loyalists when their checks began to arrive, accompanied by letters and memoranda revealing their intentions.

These letters began to come early in July at the rate of a dozen a day. The stream rose to twenty-five by August 1. By the middle of August it was forty per day, and during the last week or so of our year the band grew at the rate of about one hundred a day. Each one decided as to his own dues. Some made it a dollar; one made it five thousand dollars; and there were all sorts of sums in between. All we know is that each one agreed to make it a matter of personal sacrifice.

One man was led to give up a pet habit—that of smoking—in order that he might join in this movement, thus benefiting himself as well as the Board. Many entered into special lines of sacrifice and economy. One good friend, an octogenarian, who is still earning money, sent us his wages for one day. All the gifts did not come in the shape of checks. There were, of course, many money orders, quite a number of express orders, and a few telegrams. One friend sent a $1,000 Liberty Bond, another a card of $100 in War Savings Stamps.

Incidentally the members of the band came into a new sense of the joy and privilege of sharing in the great work of the American Board missionaries. Not one will regret the sacrifice made and the pains taken. Rather they will sympathize with those who did not make up their minds in time, or who held back for any reason. To one and all we offer congratulations. To one and all we say, "Well done, good and faithful servant."

FACING 1919

But let us not give the impression that the financial problem of the Board's one hundred and eighth year is solely or mainly the question of activities during the last two months. Preceding July and August there were ten strenuous months in which the Board, through every available channel, the columns of the Missionary Herald, the Quarterly News Bulletin, sundry leaflets, special messages to pastors, publicity matter sent to two hundred newspapers, and innumerable personal letters, kept its public informed of the needs of the work. From the very beginning of the year the officers realized that we were up against a serious financial problem. The pressure of war appeals alone would make the financing of a mission board like this a difficult task, but added to this consideration was the steady and large increase in our expenditures arising from the loss in monetary exchange in China, India, and other lands, to mention only one cause among many which made for heavy expense. Several times during the year it was necessary to revise our estimates as to the cost of the work, a fact of which the readers of the Missionary Herald need not be reminded. Thus it will be seen that the task was a cumulative one. Had it not been for the loyalty of the constituents of the Board from September to June, the problem of July and August would have been, humanly speaking, impossible.

We dwell upon the importance of all-the-year activity and watchfulness, in view of the task which now stretches before us in 1919. The months will roll by rapidly. Before we know it we shall be approaching the end of another year, which is likely to be another year of war. Unless in our church activities in behalf of the Board and in our personal gifts we start right in to support the cause sacrificially and steadily, there will be disaster when we report the outcome of 1919. We cannot emphasize too strongly the importance of what we are now saying. The next number of the Missionary Herald, which records the giving of September, should be a very significant one.

THE 109TH ANNUAL MEETING

It will be a meeting of extraordinary interest and power. Every indication points to that fact.

The Board is noted for its strong programs at the annual meeting. It could hardly be otherwise with such a wealth of missionaries home on furlough, coming from lands where great successes are being won, or where great tragedies have been enacted. This year, however, our basket is unusually full. To mention only the veterans, we find on the program such names as Cary and Pettee, of Japan; Price, of China; Clark, of Austria; Bunker, of Africa; Haskell, Peet, and Macallum, of Turkey. These well-known missionaries, however, do not surpass in their ability to tell an interesting tale the twenty or so younger men who will appear.

The Board is particularly fortunate in having three native representatives of countries in which we are working —Rev. Toraji Makino, of Japan; Mr. Chang Po-ling, of China; and H. P. Hivale, of India. Each of these brethren will close the discussion for the country which he represents. A new, and what we believe will be an exceedingly interesting feature, is the introduction of a half hour for questions and discussion from the floor following the presentation of the work in China, India, Africa, and Turkey.

The evening sessions bring to the front men of national and international reputation. The sermon on Tuesday evening will be preached by Dr. Harry P. Dewey, of Minneapolis, and the communion service at the same session will be conducted by Rev. Livingston N. Taylor, of Canandaigua. On Wednesday evening we are to listen to the Moderator of the National Council, Dr. William Horace Day, and the widely known and popular Brooklyn preacher, Dr. S. Parkes Cadman. On Thursday evening the Board is to have the privilege of listening to Dr. Gore, the famous Bishop of Oxford, who is to be in this country as a representative of the British government in behalf of the moral aims of the war.

There will be the usual interesting and stimulating reports from the field by the secretaries, in addition to which this year the Board will listen to a report from the chairman of the recent deputation to Japan, President Blaisdell, of Pomona College. Altogether the occasion will be one of such unusual interest and power that a large attendance is assured. Already over two hundred Connecticut pastors have signified their purpose to attend. There should be an outpouring of Corporate Members from all over the country, and especially from the New England district. Every delegate of the National Council should bear it in mind that he is by virtue of that fact a Corporate Member of the American Board, and under the responsibility and privilege of attending this meeting.

FOREIGN DEPARTMENT

INDIA

Home Missions in India

A recent note from President Banninga, of the Pasumalai Theological School, refers to the Institute which the seminary men and native Christians have successfully carried out in country districts, and regrets the falling off of gifts which have supported this work. "This year," he writes, "we (with some students) are visiting the Home Missionary Society's field in Konganadu, and today we are in their center. After the dozen years they have done work here they have more than two hundred Christians on their rolls. They have schools and prayer houses now in six villages, and though up to this time they have had no accessions from the caste people there, several are showing an interest, and I hope may soon come out."

Being "In It"

Missionaries become men of affairs along various lines, as the columns of the Missionary Herald often indicate. A recent letter from Rev. John X. Miller, principal of the American Mission High School and Training Institution at Pasumalai, covers a wide range of business and personal affairs. Quite by the way he says:—

"This has been a rushing year. I have been kept very busy with my regular school work, and in addition to that, have been on several important committees connected with the Missionary Educational Council. I am also a member of the Secondary School Leaving Certificate Board, which controls the work of all the high schools in South India. I was also chief examiner in English for the matriculation examination of the Madras University. This meant looking over more than 10,000 papers and the writing of more than 100 letters, and took about a month of my Kodaikanal vacation. However, I gained about ten pounds during my six weeks on the hills. Work seems to agree with me, and I am in the very best of health....

"Our present high school building was put up in 1842 and enlarged in 1892. Our numbers have more than trebled since its last enlargement. We are soon to have compulsory elementary education, and the numbers going on for secondary education will be greatly increased. We have to keep our Christian community up with the procession, or a little in advance if possible."

THE BALKANS

In and Out of War-Girt Salonica

Every word that comes from our missionaries in the Balkans in these critical times is doubly precious. Special interest will be felt in the following brief note from Rev. J. Henry House, D.D., president of the Thessalonica Agricultural and Industrial Institute, dated at "The Farm," July 19, which reached the Board Rooms September 3. It reveals a number of important facts: first, that the missionary group there is in good health and case; second, that there is chance for missionary activity and for coöperation with military authorities and the Red Cross; third, that the way is open for missionary communication with Albania, at least so far as Kortcha; and fourth, that work for the Greeks, both in the region of Salonica and in Greece proper, is being actively pursued. Dr. House writes:—

"Mr. and Mrs. Kennedy were here the other day. They had been in Athens for some time, but were on their way back to Kortcha. Mr. Brewster, I suppose, left for Athens yesterday with the Greek pastor here, to attend a conference of Greek churches. I hope that the conference will be of value in preserving unity in the work.

"The British authorities have permitted one of their well-digging machines to come up here and put down a large six and one-half inch well for us, something I have long wished for. The machine is of American make, and is in charge of an American, Mr. Freeman, of Pittsburgh.

"We are keeping open house for American Red Cross workers, who have been recently greatly increased in number. Quite a number have been up to see us; their camp is not far away. My son is working very hard these days, greatly to the relief of my burdens. We are all as well as usual."

JAPAN

Founder's Day at Kobe College

A letter from Miss Nettie L. Rupert (W. B. M. I.), one of the teachers in that great school for girls, Kobe College, shows how mission work bears fruit in kind, as the devotion of the founders reappears in the gifts and loyalty of those whom they have influenced, and the school is lifted on the shoulders of those whom it has trained:—

"Founder's Day this year was observed May 29. The program was varied somewhat from last year's, the crowning of the May Queen and the Maypole being added as new features. At 8.30 o'clock in the morning the exercises began with the planting of the ivy, which was followed by a memorial service in the chapel, in honor of the founder of the college, Miss Talcott. Three times during the day the Maypole was wound, and between these exercises short literary programs were given in the chapel. The Alumnæ Association, which is endeavoring to raise an endowment fund of 100,000 yen ($50,000) for the college, held a bazaar on the campus, from which was realized the sum of 500 yen ($250). The day was not only one of sunshine overhead, but of sunshine in every heart. Founder's Day this year will not soon be forgotten.

"Since the founding of the college,

TRAINING JAPANESE GIRLS AT KOBE COLLEGE

forty-three years ago this coming October, its growth and development have been steady. The enrollment this term is 384, which is an increase of about sixty over last year's. The college department was opened in 1895, and this year, 1918, we have separated the administration of the college and academy departments, marking another step in advance. Just now we are considering the advisability of moving the college department out of the city, where we can secure a larger tract of land for the future expansion and growth of the college. The academy will be left on the old site.

Christianity Confronts Big Business

"I think that the population of Kobe is now 600,000. The greatest city, Osaka (1,500,000), and Kobe, which are one hour apart, are now coming closer together. Some think that before many years these two cities will be one, with a population of 4,000,000. Business men say that Kobe is now the largest port on the Pacific, not excepting San Francisco. The amount of business transacted is tremendous. Young Japanese men are turning their attention to business. The commercial schools of the country are refusing hundreds of young men. This spring the Kwansei Gaduin (a large Methodist mission college) had to turn away 500 men from its commercial department, but had only one applicant to receive into its theological department.

"This situation presents a challenge to the Christian church and workers of Japan. Business men must be won to Christ. They are the men of influence and power, and this power and influence must be directed into the right channel; otherwise it will become a curse rather than a blessing. The difficulty of reaching the business men is even greater in Japan than in Western lands. However, through the Christian night schools, where English is taught, an effort is being made to lead the young men to build their characters upon the one true Rock, Christ Jesus. I believe it is true that the greater part of the wealth of America is in the hands of Christians; but that is not true in Japan. Hence the difficulty all philanthropic institutions in Japan must face in their efforts to expand their work. Many rightly say: 'Japan is making money. Let her help to develop her own educational and other institutions.' And this makes us long for the day when more of the wealth of Japan will enter the hands of generous-hearted Christian Japanese. In the meanwhile we will patiently struggle on, holding the fort for Christ with the equipment at hand, trusting God for the increase."

AFRICA

A Center of Light

One of the latest additions to the South Africa Mission, Mr. Wesley C. Atkins, who has gone out to undertake the school supervision work in the Zulu Branch which Mr. Bunker has been carrying, writes to friends in the United States of some first impressions which he has gained as he has moved about the field. His letter is dated at Adams mission station (Amanzimtoti), July 28, and runs as follows:—

"Fifty sturdy Zulu young men and twenty young women, the choicest of the something over three hundred native teachers in the Zulu primary schools of Natal, assembled at 7 A.M., daybreak in midwinter, doing woodwork, agriculture, cooking, and sewing at a winter vacation school here at Amanzimtoti, the best equipped mission center in Natal; that is the picture you would see if here now. One or two have studied in America. Some have done missionary work, teaching hundreds of miles away in the interior. They are eager, they are appreciative, they are progressing. Note this remark from one in open discussion last evening: 'Well, this has been one happy day for me, because back on the old football field this afternoon I have had the opportunity of kicking the thing I love most on earth, a football.' (The humor was unconscious.)

"The instructors are ten experts in primary school work and three government inspectors, including Dr. C. T. Loram, of Columbia University, chief inspector and executive head of the native schools of the province. The instruction includes nature study, methods of teaching, etc., in addition to branches mentioned above; prayers and spiritual addresses daily. Most of these native teachers are earnest Christians.

"The winter school opened with the selection of a delegation to visit Lord and Lady Buxton in Durban, at the request of Lord Buxton, the governor-general of all South Africa. Others of note who have made the twenty-mile trip here to see the teachers assembled include Mayor Nicolson, of Durban, the head of the Durban Technical College, with its 3,000 students; the Anglican bishop, who preached this morning; the governor of the province; and the chief executives of the Native Affairs Department.

"This morning our native pastor, who has been here fourteen years, a noble, spiritually minded man who lives what he preaches, bade us farewell, as he is leaving for another field farther interior. At the close of the service the congregation went one at a time to the front and deposited money offerings on the table for him. His salary is $300, not too much for a family of ten or more, who must also entertain unlimited numbers of pastors, delegates, and unfortunates. A native custom is to put such things as a few feathers, or a wisp of goat's hair, or bit of pumpkin into the contribution box. These samples indicate corresponding wholes—a chicken, or goat, or pumpkin, waiting outside the church for the benefit of the cause receiving aid.

"My impression of our work throughout the mission is of modest but distinct progress within the past six months: including revivals in strategic places, several churches calling capable pastors, several stumbling blocks removed, and genuine progress and good spirit in the schools. The annual native meeting last week, with 250 delegates and 800 communicants on Sunday, was a great spiritual storage battery. The spirit was said to be unusually fine, and the preaching by natives excellent."

THE BOOKSHELF

A Prince of the Church in India. By J. C. R. Ewing, D.D., LL.D. New York: Fleming H. Revell Co. Pp. 128. Price, 75 cents net.

Dr. Ewing is fortunate in his title for this brief biography of Rev. Kali Charan Chatterjee, D.D., Brahman by birth, Christian by conviction and education, for forty-eight years a missionary of the Presbyterian Church at Hoshyapur, India. Dr. Chatterjee was well known and beloved in America, received the Kaiser-i-Hind medal from the Indian government for public services there, received a Doctorate in Divinity from the University of Edinburgh, and was honored in countless ways during his leadership in Christian progress in India. His death occurred in 1915.

Underwood of Korea. By Lillian H. Underwood, M.D. New York: Fleming H. Revell Co. Pp. 350. Price, $1.50 net.

The Koreans called Dr. Horace G. Underwood "Bundle of Fire," or sometimes "Nulbun Nalgai," which means "Wide Wings," because, as they said, "he covers so much." As one reads Mrs. Underwood's delightfully written story of her husband's thirty-one years of service as a missionary of the Presbyterian Board in Korea, one can easily see that he deserved both the picturesque titles given him. A man of absolute faith, of an indomitable will, of brotherly love, and of serene unselfishness, it is easy to see that his influence would be wide and strong, that he would rank among the missionary statesmen who will be in a class by themselves when the world's history comes to be written. Mrs. Underwood has made wise choice from the wealth of material before her, and many interesting pictures are included in a most successful biography.

Women Workers of the Orient. By Margaret E. Burton. West Medford, Mass.: Central Committee on the United Study of Foreign Missions. Pp. 240. Price, 50 cents; postage added, 7 cents.

This is the text-book recommended by the Central Committee on the United Study of Foreign Missions for this, its eighteenth season. It is devoted to women workers in Oriental lands and comes with a certain fitness for the study of women in our own country, since they are active in and thinking of varied kinds of work as never before these war days. Miss Burton has a mass of material, and some of it is fascinating. Her chapters on "Broadening Horizons" and on "The Call for Leaders" are wonderfully illuminating. Well-chosen pictures, a suggestive supplementary reading list, and sets of questions emphasizing the points in each chapter add to the book's value.

WORLD BRIEFS

And now a Chinese concordance has been printed. It is in three volumes; was prepared and issued by Rev. H. G. C. Hallock, of Shanghai, and contains 400,000 direct or indirect Bible references, using 5,000,000 Chinese characters. It follows a plan similar to that of Cruden's Concordance, contains a Bible dictionary in Chinese and a text-book of Bible names.

At an exhibition in Peking, China, of the outcome of a month's work of sewing and knitting on the part of the Americans in and about the city for Red Cross activities, an astonishingly large output was shown. Camel's wool, spun into yarn for practically the first time, had been knitted into jackets, which were one rarity. Nearly all the material used, cotton and wool alike, had been bought in the place and, our correspondents declare, at less cost than is elsewhere possible.

The latest figures show that India has nearly 4,000,000 more acres under wheat than in 1915, nearly as much extra under rice, while the area under cotton has increased over 4,000,000 acres. In the same time, her increase in acreage and in yield per acre of sugar shows that she will soon supply her own needs and have a surplus. If trained demonstrators could go among this great people, India could make a quicker and larger food response than any other country on earth.

The American Bible Society reports that a new worker has just entered upon his labors in the West Indian Islands. Dr. Jose Marcial, a native of Spain, a graduate of the University of Madrid, well known in literary and religious circles, after some months of study of the society's methods and general missionary activities, sailed for Porto Rico, where he has safely arrived. He will visit the Virgin Islands, where the United States has assumed new responsibilities; Cuba; Haiti, where remarkable changes are taking place; and Santo Domingo.

A Wonder

Every one who sees it says it is a wonder how the

Year Book of Missions for 1919

can be sold for ten cents.

It can't. There's no profit in it at that price. But it isn't printed for profit. It is printed to furnish what the friends of the American Board and the Woman's Boards need to know, and to furnish it in inviting form.

The 1919 issue is up to the standard; that's saying enough. Cover design, illustrations, text, tables, all are new and attractive. Sight of a copy would make the dime leap in your pocket.

PRICE: Ten Cents

With two-cent stamp added for postage

Sow your Church with Copies and Reap a Crop of Missionary Interest.

Packages of fifty or more copies can be had for $4.00 for each fifty copies, shipped collect, from the American Board's offices, 14 Beacon Street, Boston.

The single copies can be obtained from any of the District offices, or from
